PROLOGUE

WILDERNESS OF THE ALCAN

To those who love the great outdoors, whether it be to thrill to the pursuit of wild game or to enjoy the beauty of primeval surroundings, untouched by the crush of civilization, we offer the Alcan Wilderness.

This vast panorama of mountains, rivers, lakes, forests, glaciers, seacoasts, islands, and fjords is comprised of Alaska, Canada's Yukon Territory, and the Canadian provinces of British Columbia and Alberta. Throughout much of its remote expanse it is possible to traverse hundreds of miles without crossing a motor road. The land area is three-fourths that of all Europe, excluding Russia. The human population is less than that of tiny Switzerland. Even these few people are largely concentrated in cities. The bulk of this immense area is virtually uninhabited.

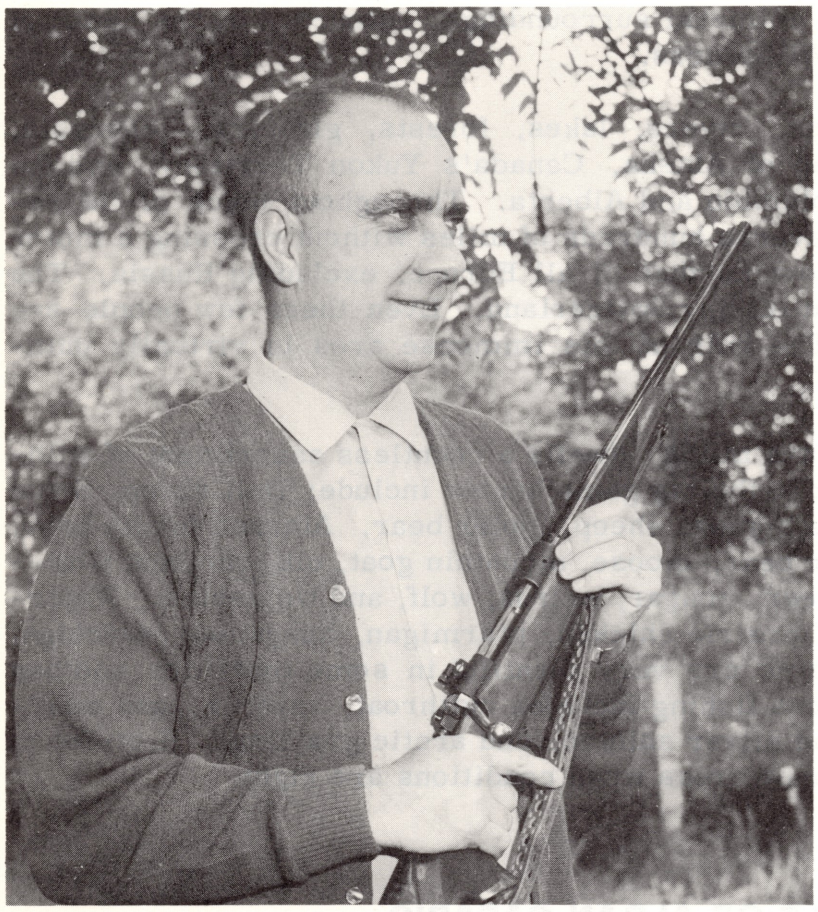
Here, in a million and a half square miles, dwells a countless assortment of wildlife. Species that are of interest to the big game hunter include: Dall sheep, Stone sheep, bighorn sheep, California bighorn sheep, polar bear, Alaskan brown bear, grizzly bear, black bear, glacier bear, moose, mountain goat, elk, caribou, white-tail deer, mule deer, blacktail deer, cougar, walrus, wolf, and wolverine. Waterfowl abound. Grouse, pheasant, prairie chicken, ptarmigan, hungarian partridge, and other varieties of upland game are very plentiful in some localities and bag limits are generous. The fabulous fishing includes cutthroat, rainbow, and steelhead trout, dolly varden, king and silver salmon, and arctic grayling. A strike on every cast is not uncommon in many areas when conditions are right.

THE ROLE OF ALCAN SAFARIS

A successful and enjoyable outing in this delightful region of beauty and grandeur involves the hiring of a professional guide and outfitter. We, of Alcan Safaris, have arranged for the services of the most outstanding and reliable people in the business. In addition we have a good working knowledge of game distributions. In our files there is up-to-date information on hunting, fishing, and general vacation prospects throughout the Alcan region as well as the booking openings available. We have access to tours and group outings and an excellent variety of special interest items. A few examples include: two-hundred mile trail rides down the spine of the Rocky Mountains in Alberta; river boat cruises on the Peace and Stikine rivers in British Columbia; and fly-in summer vacations at Alaskan lake camps one hundred and fifty miles from the nearest road.

It is our business to know which are the best outfitters for these trips. Our high standards must be met before services are rendered for our clients. We perform the function, in the customer's behalf, of a contracting travel and purchasing agency. The use of our services will make your trip a thrilling and memorable adventure.

THE MANAGEMENT



WYATT

Ken Wyatt, manager of Alcan Safaris, has been an ardent hunter, competition shooter, and outdoors enthusiast all his life. He has participated in many back country trips by aircraft, pack train, boat, and backpack. In the process he has taken more than a hundred big game animals. Wyatt also spent ten years as a commercial pilot in the Pacific Northwest in flight instruction, charter work, and bush flying.

In the firearms field he was for some time assistant to Mr. Jack O'Connor, shooting editor of one of the leading outdoor magazines and one of the foremost authorities in the world on the subject of big game hunting. He has spent some time working in the Speer bullet manufacturing plant in Idaho and developed the handgun loading data for the Speer reloading manuals. His competition activities have centered around pistol and revolver shooting, in the course of which he held the Idaho State Pistol Championship eight times.

Wyatt has also been a custom gunsmith and gun shop operator and was the inventor of the .45 caliber conversion of the Luger pistol. This invention was awarded United States patent number 3, 039, 366.

He has been a member of the National Rifle Association for nearly twenty years, is a permanent member of the board of directors of the Lewiston Pistol Club, Inc., Lewiston, Idaho, and is a past president and director of the Idaho State Rifle and Pistol Association.

Wyatt is thoroughly familiar with booking, dispatching, and other agency services, having operated a service type business with world-wide affiliation for many years.

THE NATURE OF OUR SERVICE

ALCAN SAFARIS presents the very best of the northern hunting and vacationing activities in compact all-expense packages. Our function is that of a combined travel service and contracting purchasing agent. We include all costs of transportation, licenses, outfitting services, meals, lodging, guide service, incidentals, disposal of meat, and care and transportation of trophies in one pre-determined figure. In addition we make all arrangements with airlines, hotels, outfitters, game departments, and freight companies. The client is provided with sufficient instructions and suggestions to permit trouble-free clearance of customs and other points of possible difficulty. Outfitters are thoroughly investigated regarding such traits as integrity, reliability, experience, congeniality, and ability to produce results. Determination is made of the adequacy of equipment and facilities available. We handle all correspondence.

For our theater of operations we have selected Alaska and Western Canada. This is the "Alcan" wilderness. In all the world there is none finer. The area is outlined on the back cover.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PURCHASER

To the prospective client for big game hunts, wilderness fishing trips, and outdoor summer vacations, there has, in the past, been a pronounced lack of organized and coordinated thru-service available. For the individual to plan and carry out a successful and satisfying two-week outing to a really remote area can easily take up to a year of correspondence, reading, and inquiry. A few of the things that must be considered are: area geography, distribution of game species, legal seasons, license requirements, and clothing needs. Then follows investigation of outfitter reputations and past performance records, transportation, payment of trophy fees, shipment of trophies, disposal of meat, and a workable itinerary. If the outing is a fishing trip or summer vacation, such things as scenery, planned activities, and an interesting schedule assume considerable importance. The COMPLETE SERVICE PACKAGE as provided by Alcan Safaris has many advantages. Some of these are:

* Permits the client to make all arrangements with one contact.

* Gives him the certainty of a known total cost factor.

* Takes care of all details, eliminating the necessity to examine great quantities of literature and engage in lengthy correspondence.

* Assures the client the services of personnel that have been thoroughly screened and checked on the basis of past performance.

* Provides single-party responsibility for scheduling and quality of services for the entire trip.

* Assures the client that he will be placed in an area that is well suited to the particular activity he has in mind. If the outing is a hunting safari he can be confident of being programmed to a region inhabited by the species he wants to hunt -- at a suitable season.

* Permits him to make the entire trip within the span of his vacation.

* Eliminates the uncertainty of how to handle shipment of trophies to his home or taxidermist and how much time and money to allow for it.

* Makes available to the client easy selection of the recreational activities best suited to his interests.

SINGLE SPECIES HUNT

FOR ONE OF THE FOLLOWING –

ZONE B (BRITISH COLUMBIA – ALBERTA) – MOOSE, ELK, CARIBOU, MOUNTAIN GOAT, GRIZZLY BEAR (FALL)

ZONE A (ALASKA – YUKON) – DALL SHEEP, MOOSE, CARIBOU, MOUNTAIN GOAT, GRIZZLY BEAR (FALL)

DALL SHEEP: This is the most northerly ranging member of the so-called thinhorns. Found throughout much of Alaska and Yukon Territory, the beautiful white Dall is our most plentiful North American wild sheep. Wary and difficult to approach, he makes a wonderful trophy. A fine Dall head mounted on the den or living room wall points up a grand accomplishment.

EXCELLENT DALL RAM –

PHOTOGRAPHED WHERE HE FELL

MOOSE: The largest member of the deer family. Generally speaking, the farther north one goes the larger he will find them. It is not uncommon for Alaskan and Yukon bulls to stand seven feet at the shoulder. Their bulk is difficult to believe. Antler size increases proportionately.

ELK: In the Alcan region the range of this species is quite limited. For our purposes they will be listed as available in Zone B only. The range centers in southern Canada's Rocky Mountains. This is a fine sporting animal. He is large, wary, and carries a beautiful set of trophy antlers. Anyone who has ever seen a mature bull in his natural habitat and heard his hair-raising, challenging 'bugle' is not likely to forget it.

CARIBOU: The beautiful wanderer of the north. Although he spreads throughout most of the Alcan the caribou is most plentiful in Alaska. Here the bag limit in many areas south of the Yukon River is three per season. North of the river there is no closed season and no bag limit. The caribou's beautiful coloration and tremendous antlers make him an outstanding trophy for the den.

MOUNTAIN GOAT: While not actually a member of the goat family at all, this hard-to-get animal's snowy white hair and sharp black horns make an impressive wall adornment. He lives in the high, rocky crags where every step of the way is up and the going can be very difficult and dangerous. This coveted trophy is quite plentiful in some areas, scarce in others. Even where he is plentiful, however, you will find that getting him takes some doing.

GRIZZLY BEAR: The grizzly is discussed in full under the safari item 'Spring Grizzly Bear' on page 17.

BIG GAME, MIXED BAG HUNT

This can be anything from a combination moose and black bear hunt of two weeks duration to one lasting two months, covering hundreds of miles on horseback, and taking trophy specimens of sheep, moose, goat, caribou, and grizzly. About one specimen per week can be expected under most conditions unless the client is hunting for exceptional trophies. Sheep and goat will normally require more time than moose, caribou, or elk. Grizzly vary a great deal in the time required. Three weeks is about minimum if bighorn sheep are on the list.

As used here, the term 'mixed bag' refers to the variety of game to be found within the territory of a single outfitter.

Species desired in order of preference, should be stated on the ORDER FOR SERVICES form (page 45). Since it is not always possible to fill exact combinations, the first choice is given top priority.

BIGHORN SHEEP

(ZONE B ONLY)

A bighorn ram displaying a full curl is probably the most prized animal trophy in the western hemisphere. Usually the big rams live at high elevations in hunting season, far from any trace of civilization, and completely apart from the ewes and lambs. Many authorities claim that if one is hunting bighorns and is seeing ewes and lambs he had best move to another location.

The bighorn is the largest-bodied North American sheep, often weighing in the neighborhood of three hundred pounds. He also has the heaviest horn structure. However, his horns are not likely to be quite as long as those of the thinhorn varieties (Dall and Stone) since he is more inclined to rub the tips on rocks and wear them blunt or 'broomed'. Some authorities attribute this habit to the fact that he has a close-curling horn which results in the tip growing up in front of the eye and somewhat blocking his line of vision. Since sheep depend heavily on their wonderful eyesight for protection, it is believed that the brooming is the result of an effort to keep the vision unobstructed. This type of thing is not so pronounced with either the Dall or Stone sheep, both of which, as a general rule, have wider flaring horn tips.

The bighorn is found in the Alcan region in Zone B only (British Columbia–Alberta). In some sections he is quite plentiful.

CALIFORNIA BIGHORN

An interesting sub-species is the California bighorn which is found largely in the dry belt of southern British Columbia east of the summit of the Coast Range. It is probable that this animal would qualify as a desert bighorn except that the area in which he is found, although quite dry, is not desert. According to the Government of British Columbia, his latin classification is Ovis Canadensis Californiana. This is the classification of a southern sub-species recognized as desert sheep.

Although the California bighorn is not so plentiful as the Rocky Mountain bighorn, we have outfitters available who have a good success ratio on this fine animal.

It is best to book at least a three-week outing for either of these types if one is serious about getting a first-class trophy head.

STONE SHEEP

Or MIXED BAG INCLUDING STONE SHEEP

(ZONE B ONLY)

The last North American sheep to be discovered, somewhat rare, and with a restricted range, is the Stone. This animal is a sub-species of the Dall and is found at the very southern end of the thinhorn domain. For practical purposes this is northern British Columbia, although the species is not confined entirely to this province.

The Stone sheep is truly the black sheep of the north. In color and markings he varies considerably, ranging from a white animal with a grayish saddle known as the Fannin or saddle-back sheep to the true, dark Stone. In the extreme he is virtually black except for his rump and underparts and a shading of gray about the face.

His range is very remote and is some of the finest wilderness left in the world. On the whole it is excellent country for horseback travel and is usually hunted by pack train transportation to base camp and by horseback and foot scouting from there. If at all possible at least three weeks should be allowed for a good trophy hunt.

Since the tariff lists this safari as either Stone sheep or mixed bag including them, we should say something about the other species likely to be taken in the general area. These are moose, caribou, mountain goat, grizzly bear, and black bear. They are all reasonably plentiful in most good Stone sheep country. For that reason, this particular safari is one of the best available for an extended trip. A party of two to four hunters can spend a delightful six weeks in this beautiful region. Game is plentiful, fishing is excellent, and the climate is wonderful. Much of the area can be covered almost completely on horseback. Book this one plenty far in advance!

SPRING GRIZZLY BEAR

On the first warm days of spring, while there are still patches of snow on the mountainsides, the big grizzlies may be seen on the green slopes, where they are busy searching for marmots and other rodents in an attempt to satisfy ravenous appetites acquired during a very long nap.

Most guides and professional hunters agree that this is an excellent time of year to hunt any kind of bear. The hair of the coats is long and heavy after the cold winter, providing beautiful trophies. Also the animals' quest for food keeps them on the move and out in the open a great deal where they can be more easily seen.

In some areas the most popular method of hunting grizzlies is to place a bait, using dead stock for the attraction. The 'set' is then stalked periodically with the purpose of surprising a large, shaggy visitor. A hungry bear will come to one of these baits from miles away unless something makes him suspicious.

Another successful method is that of using binoculars to glass the open slopes in an effort to find a bear digging out squirrels or marmots.

Grizzlies are well known for their short tempers and their inclination to resent being pierced by a poorly placed or inadequate bullet. Therefore, we heartily recommend the use of a rifle of sufficient power for the job at hand. Thorough familiarity with the weapon is likewise an excellent idea. In Alberta, guides are forbidden by law to carry firearms. When the setting of the hunt is in this province, the client must face his moment of truth with nothing to back him up but words of encouragement. Throughout the rest of the Alcan region, guides are allowed to carry rifles.

It is quite common to see several black bears during the course of a grizzly hunt. Since the seasons on these two animals run concurrently in most sections, the hunter is often presented with the opportunity to take a nice blackie as a bonus.

Here is an excellent way to spend a couple of weeks of good spring weather after waiting out the long winter – sitting by the sun-bathed rock slides, glassing the green slopes for a big silvertip grizzly.

ALASKAN BROWN BEAR

(ZONE A ONLY)

Up in the North Pacific, just under the rim of mainland Alaska, lies a snow-crested green island called Kodiak. Here in a raw and roadless wilderness of northland fjords, hidden bays, secluded inland lakes, and hushed valleys, roams the fabled monster that excites the imagination of hunters the world over -- the giant Kodiak bear.

This tremendous animal – correctly known throughout its general range as the Alaskan brown bear – is claimed by many authorities to approach fourteen hundred pounds in weight. An occasional large hide will square nearly eleven feet. That happens to be enough bear rug to carpet a small bedroom virtually wall to wall.

The Alaskan browns are not unique to Kodiak island although it is from this beautiful spot that many of the biggest ones have come. The great beasts – claimed to be the world's largest carnivorous land animals – are very numerous on the remote vastness of the Alaska Peninsula. They are also hunted throughout much of the beautiful Alexander Archipelago comprising Southeast Alaska and in other areas of the south Alaska coastal regions. The brownie has earned the respect of hunters as being a dangerous adversary when wounded and is given a wide berth by unarmed men at any time.

Spring is the best season, though there is considerable hunting activity in the fall as well. Fishing is excellent in most of the hunting regions with the menu including steelhead, rainbow, and cutthroat trout, dolly varden, king and silver salmon, arctic grayling, and other species. Varmint shooting is usually available, if desired, in the form of hair seals and sealions. Some of the brown bear areas also have excellent hunting for black bear on neighboring islands, and limited opportunities for the rare blue or glacier bears.

POLAR BEAR

(ZONE A ONLY)

Here is the game for the really adventurous! Here is a unique hunting technique. Here is weird and awe-inspiring scenery. Here is DANGER! Danger from the arctic weather; danger from light aircraft operation in a hostile environment; and, of course, danger from the possibility of wounding and enraging a great white bear that could, in all probability, stand on his hind feet and look DOWN on the eaves of your house.

The great record polar bear displayed in the State of Alaska exhibit at the Seattle World's Fair in 1962 was accompanied by a placard stating that he stood eleven feet one and one-half inches. He was mounted erect, and we know of no one who saw him who didn't agree vehemently that he was an awesome and beautiful sight.

The popular and practical method of hunting these huge nomads of the north is by cruising in pairs of light aircraft the ice-bound waters of the Arctic Ocean, Chukchi Sea, and Bering Strait. The pilots search for 'leads' of open water. Where the leads are found, so are the seals; and where the seals are found, so are the bears. When a trophy animal is sighted, one of the aircraft makes a landing on a nearby stretch of hospitable-appearing ice. The second craft may either circle or land, depending on conditions. If the hunter can be landed successfully in the vicinity, the stalk begins, using piles of ice known as pressure ridges for concealment.

Temperatures may run as low as minus forty fahrenheit. However, the days are quite long in the early arctic spring and a good day's hunting can be had if the weather cooperates. Due to the cold, rifle actions must be degreased in advance. Scope sights, if used, should be of the non-fogging type. Cameras must have special servicing in order to function. Cold weather clothing as described on page 30 is essential.

Yes, here is excitement and adventure. These hunts are expensive, but worth every dollar of it to those who like their living spiced a bit.

Living quarters during these outings are the hotels of Barrow and Kotzebue, Alaska.

A LADY OF COURAGE!

CUSTOM SAFARIS

Under this heading can be arranged nearly any type of outing or combination of circumstances desired that is not already listed in the foregoing pages. Some of the possibilities are as follows:

MULTIPLE SHEEP HUNTS. It is possible to take, in one season, three kinds of sheep – at times four kinds – from the Alcan region.

MULTIPLE BEAR HUNTS. Polar, Alaskan brown, black, and a possibility of glacier bear in Zone A; and grizzly and black in Zone B can all be hunted in one spring season.

MULTIPLE MIXED-BAG HUNTS, beginning in late July in the Brooks Range of Alaska, working into the Yukon in August, and on down into British Columbia and Alberta through September and October, can be arranged. Such an extended safari can readily result in the bagging of twenty to twenty-five animals in a single fall season.

WINTER COUGAR HUNTS with dog packs. An outstanding experience.

EARLY SPRING WOLF HUNTS, using shotguns from light aircraft. An exciting pastime – not exactly devoid of danger.

WALRUS or WHALE HUNTS. Ditto.

COMBINATION HUNTS for polar bear, caribou, and wolves in the early spring on Alaska's arctic slope.

Similar possibilities exist in planning custom vacation outings, fishing safaris, and photographic expeditions. Use your imagination. We will attempt to furnish anything you can think of, within reason.

CUSTOM PRICE QUOTATIONS: We make an advance charge of $50.00 to cover the cost of making inquiries and arrangements necessary to quote a firm price on a custom safari. This is not refundable. However, if the outing is booked we apply it against the total price.

ARCTIC WOLF –
BROOKS RANGE, ALASKA

Sprawling across northern Alaska and separating the Arctic shelf from the great central river basins, the Brooks Range comprises an area roughly the size of the State of California. There are no roads or railroads in this game-rich region. The only settlements are a few native villages. Principal animal species are Dall sheep, grizzly, moose, caribou, and wolf.

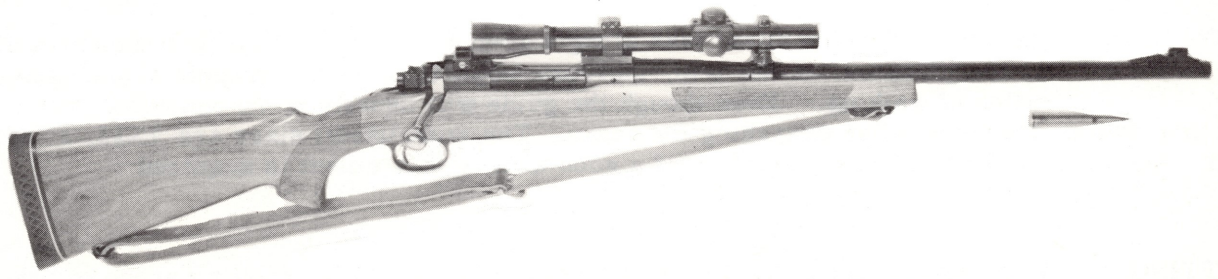
HUNTING SAFARIS

An important point that must be kept in mind while assembling equipment and clothing is the maximum baggage allowance of airlines. On all our safaris, the client is allowed sixty-six pounds of baggage. Where the individual airline maximum is below this, Alcan Safaris pays for the excess baggage charges up to a maximum total weight of sixty-six pounds. Since overages are quite expensive, every effort should be made by the client not to exceed this weight. Baggage should be completely assembled and weighed in advance so that excesses can be dealt with.

Following is a general suggestion list of items of equipment. Some are conveniences -- others are necessities. Some of the articles may not be applicable to some types of outings, but quite necessary to others. Specific instructions are issued to the client for the type of safari he orders.

RIFLE: Since this is usually the most important single piece of equipment, we will take it up first. It goes without saying that for a hunt of these proportions, a good quality rifle of adequate power is a must. If one is thoroughly familiar with this subject he probably already has some definite ideas concerning it. If not, then we suggest that the majority of guides and experienced hunters consider rifles of the .30-06 or .270 Winchester class to be about minimum in power requirements for the game to be hunted in Alaska and western Canada. If one has done enough shooting to be able to competently handle the recoil of something larger, it is probable that he can use such rifles as the various .300 magnums, the .338 Winchester, or the .375 magnum to advantage -- particularly on the big bears. Generally speaking, rifles of sufficient power for this work are made in bolt-action type although there are exceptions. Most authorities agree, however, that for all-around considerations of accuracy, reliability, and killing power, the bolt-action is best for the Alcan region.

SIGHTING EQUIPMENT will vary according to individual tastes and to demands of the climate and terrain. The majority of hunters prefer telescopic sights and there is no doubt that they are the best aiming device yet invented - under most conditions. The usual choice ranges from two-and-one-half to six power with many preferring four power. There are, however, many sections in Alaska and some in Canada where, due to heavy rainfall, brushy shooting conditions, or both, the hunter may be better served with a good set of metallic sights. The best of these is the aperture or "peep" rear and the bead or post front sight. Excessive moisture will not put them out of action even temporarily, and they are plenty accurate enough for most shooting distances to be found in the heavy rainfall areas. In general these are the coastal and island sections of Alaska and British Columbia.



An interesting and effective safari rifle. It is a customized .338 Winchester magnum with a twenty-inch barrel driving a 210-grain partition-jacket bullet above 3000 feet-per-second. Designed mainly for big bear and moose in coastal climates, the metallic sights are primary equipment. Unusual far-forward mounting permits removal, replacement, and full use of scope without disturbing the metallics. Scope is mostly for inland hunting of elk, caribou, sheep, and goat. Incidentally, it actually returns to zero when replaced. Weight is $8\frac{1}{4}$ pounds - $7\frac{1}{2}$ pounds without scope.

Whatever sighting equipment is decided upon, be certain that it is properly zeroed in with the same ammunition you intend to use on the hunt. If one is not qualified to accomplish this himself, he can usually get assistance from a shooting friend, sporting goods store, or local rifle club. Many experienced hunters prefer to have their rifles shoot to the point of aim at two hundred yards. Such a sighting arrangement will handle most shots at big game without having to aim high or low.

An accessory for the gun that is often indispensable is a carrying strap or sling. Many times it is convenient to carry the weapon on one's back or shoulder by use of the sling while hiking or climbing. It can also be used to excellent advantage for steadying the aim in shooting.

Some hunters feel that they should take two rifles on a hunt of this magnitude and there are some valid arguments in favor of this. However, in nine cases out of ten, an extra rifle is more nuisance than it is worth. Baggage problems are increased from start to finish, particularly in the case of maximum airline weights and horseback transportation.

AMMUNITION: Canadian customs requirements limit the visitor to fifty cartridges duty-free. This should be ample if one's rifle is zeroed in before leaving home. There are no customs requirements for United States citizens going to Alaska.

It is usually best to avoid the lightest bullet weights for big game. Use of the medium or heavy bullets is recommended in most calibers. Extremely light bullets have a tendency to shatter upon impact or expand too violently without giving adequate penetration. This is particularly true when dealing with the heavier, tougher game such as moose, elk, grizzly bear, Alaskan brown bear, and polar bear.

Every opportunity should be taken to get in as much practice as possible with the rifle and ammunition prior to departure. We recommend thorough familiarity with the operation of the rifle action, the safety, the sighting equipment, and the bullet trajectory.

SCABBARD: Some type of case is needed to cover the rifle and protect it in transit. The best and most versatile for all-around use is a saddle scabbard of heavy, stiff leather that has been fitted with a detachable, buckle-on cover for the open end. This will completely enclose the weapon for shipment or for horseback use in the rain, but can still be used as a conventional open-end scabbard in good weather, leaving easy access to the rifle. Heavy construction will give added protection against rough handling by baggage personnel. If one wishes to protect the finish of the gun against the inevitable rubbing and chafing that ordinary leather produces, he can have the scabbard custom made and lined with horsehide. One of these usually costs but little more than the commercial varieties and is much easier on the finish of a fine gun.

BINOCULAR: We advise that the client take along a good binocular. This instrument will add to the pleasure of the trip, increase opportunities for trophies, and save many miles of walking. Even though the guide will usually be so equipped, two sets of eyes are better than one when searching for game. The most useful sizes are 7X35, 8X30, and 9X35. Any of these will prove satisfactory if a good quality instrument is acquired.

SPOTTING SCOPE: When hunting for an exceptional trophy head, a quality spotting scope of twenty to thirty power is indicated. This will greatly enhance the chances of getting what one wants and save a great deal of hiking. These scopes are most effectively used in conjunction with a small tripod with which most of them come equipped. The instrument is used largely to evaluate the quality of trophies that have already been located with the binocular or naked eye. It is best if this item be taken along only on specific advice, since many guides carry a scope as standard equipment in mountain hunting and one of these is all that is really necessary per guide-client group.

KNIFE: The client will find a good quality hunting knife to be a very useful item. If it is of the folding type it can be carried in the pocket. If of the belt type it must, of course, have a scabbard.

CAMERA: If at all possible a camera should be taken along to record the highlights of the trip and get pictures of the country. To the experienced camera fan we will not attempt to give any advice on this subject. However, to the novice we might suggest that one of the current still models in 35-millimeter with automatic built-in light meter will do an excellent job with a minimum of knowledge on the part of the operator. Some of these come with tiny flash attachments that make good close-ups possible under virtually any light conditions. Take an adequate supply of film. You will take more pictures than you might suppose. A good photographic record of the trip is well worth the time and effort expended. Friends and relatives are interested to see where one has been and what he has accomplished.

FLASHLIGHT: A two-cell flashlight with two extra batteries and one extra bulb is well worth having along.

PACKSACK: A small packsack or rucksack comes in very handy when hunting afoot. In it can be carried such things as a lunch, flashlight, camera, and rain jacket; and they are all out of the way until needed.

ALASKAN SALMON STREAM – BROWN BEAR COUNTRY.

SLEEPING BAG: A good quality heavy duty down filled bag is the only kind worth considering for the northern latitudes in hunting season. A medium weight wool blanket placed inside is an excellent addition. The blanket can be used, or not, as the weather dictates. When used, it should be taken out and aired during the day. Since beds and bedding are at times furnished by the outfitters, we may occasionally advise that the sleeping bag be left home. However, unless specific instructions to the contrary are received, it should be taken along.

PILLOW: If accustomed to one, you may not rest well without it. This item can be put inside the sleeping bag and rolled up with it. Keep it small and light.

AIR MATTRESS: This is an important part of the camper's bed. It is essential to getting a good night's rest under most hunting camp conditions. It should be the heavy duty variety of rubber or fabric-backed rubber. The light plastic ones will not stand hard usage. We also recommend an air valve that does not require a pump for inflation. Pumps can get lost or out of working order.

BED ROLL COVER: Some type of light-weight waterproof wrapper for your bedroll is a good idea. Nothing can add to the success of the trip like a warm, dry bed. The complete bed (sleeping bag, blanket, pillow, deflated air mattress, and cover) can be rolled up into one compact bed roll for transporting.

DUFFLE BAG: A heavy canvas duffle bag of the type used by military personnel is an excellent thing in which to carry extra clothes and miscellaneous items of equipment. In it can be placed everything except the rifle and bedroll. This keeps the baggage down to the minimum number of three pieces, thus reducing the likelihood of losing an important piece of gear in transit. A very handy item to include in the duffle bag is a small laundry sack for containing soiled clothing until getting an opportunity to launder. Camera, binocular, and other fragiles can be wrapped in wool shirts or something similar and stowed deep in the center of the bag to compensate for rough handling by baggage personnel at air terminals and other points. A lightweight, waterproof wrapper for the duffle bag is also highly advisable as baggage can sometimes be exposed to wet weather for short periods.

HANDGUNS: If a client wishes to book a hunt using a heavy caliber handgun such as the .44 magnum, it can be arranged in Alaska. Pistols or revolvers may not be used in Canada.

BOW AND ARROW: Bow hunters are generally welcome throughout the Alcan. No trouble will normally be experienced in placing their bookings.

CLOTHING: This is a somewhat controversial subject due to the fact that different people have different needs. What will keep one man warm and comfortable may not do so for another. The problem is further complicated by the wide range of elevations, degrees of latitude, and months of the year involved in our scope of operations. Here we will present a list of clothing that is unnecessarily complete for some parts of the Alcan region at some times of the year. However, if the client goes equipped as suggested he should be able to remain comfortable under just about any conditions encountered. Further necessary instructions or suggestions for specific regional requirements are issued before departure when applicable. The following is based on the two-week safari. For longer outings, some increase in quantity may be desirable.

SUGGESTIONS FOR POLAR BEAR HUNTS

Minimum temperatures may be from twenty to forty degrees below zero. Bright snow conditions prevail. Rifle actions must be thoroughly degreased. Scope sights must be of the non-fogging type. Cameras must be specially serviced and dark sunglasses are a necessity. There is no need for clients to furnish bedrolls as lodging is in hotels at Barrow or Kotzebue. A change of lighter clothing is necessary in transit and around living quarters.

ARCTIC CLOTHING: All clothes should be loose fitting.

UNDERWEAR:	2 suits long cotton thermal knit 1 suit long heavy wool 1 suit insulated underwear (down-filled)
SOX:	2 pair light wool 2 pair medium wool 6 pair heavy wool

MISCELLANEOUS EQUIPMENT

Into this category can be lumped many small things that will vary somewhat to suit individual needs. Some of these include: shaving outfit, comb, toothbrush, eye-glasses, sun-glasses, medicine that one may be taking, waterproof matchbox, smoking materials, small whetstone, rifle cleaning equipment, flashlight, hunting knife, ammunition, small mirror, belt container for ammunition, handkerchiefs, camera film, money, and personal identification. It is well to have a small container to hold the above-mentioned items with the exception of those that are carried on the person. This container can be placed in the duffle bag and will prevent these small things from getting scattered through the other duffle.

PERSONAL EQUIPMENT AND CLOTHING FOR OUTDOOR VACATIONS

Due to the fact that the variety of activities and seasons of the year involved in vacations are so extensive and diverse, it is not practical to go into such detail here as it was on the more specific activity of big game hunting. Many of the suggestions in the hunting section just preceding will be applicable to nearly any contemplated outing. It is advisable that they be read and used as a guide. Clothing needs will be shaded to the heavier side for winter outings and to the lighter side for summer. Bear in mind, though, that in these northern latitudes, and particularly at the higher elevations, no month of the year is completely free of the possibility of snowfall. Specific instructions and suggestions are issued to clients regarding equipment and clothing lists after the booking has been placed and it can be determined exactly what will be needed.

RELATIONS WITH THE OUTFITTER

Clients should bear in mind at all times that the outfitter selected to provide them with service is an independent businessman. He has a considerable financial investment in the equipment and facilities he is using to assure the comfort and success of the outing. Many years of his life have been spent in acquiring the knowledge and skills necessary to give you, the client, a successful trip. If you will accord him and his organization the interest and respect due them you will no doubt find that they will respond in like fashion. Cordial relations all around will go a long way toward assuring everyone concerned a pleasant, enjoyable, and successful safari.

PERMANENT CAMP

GUEST RANCH, LODGE, CABIN, STATIONARY CAMP SITE

With this type of vacation outing can be combined a wide variety of activities. These include fishing, upland bird shooting, waterfowl hunting, photography, exploring, horseback riding, jeep scouting, rock hunting, gold panning, back-packing, snowshoeing, skiing, winter camp-outs, running trap lines, or winter cabin camping. If one just wants to relax, sit in a big easy chair on the sun porch and look at the mountains, that too can be arranged.

In the Alcan wilderness you can have just about any kind of climate your heart desires.

You can have mountains, rivers, lakes, or sea coast. You can have big timber or tundra. The variety is beyond description. The fishing is often beyond belief.

This country is wild! If you are tired of crowds – of rubbing elbows with people – this is for you.

Some of these locations can be reached by vehicle – others cannot. Some may only be reached by light aircraft and bush pilots.

Some have radio-telephone facilities. At others one cannot be contacted at all except by bush-plane messengers.

Of one thing you may rest assured –– being so completely removed from everyday cares makes this old world seem like a new place. Mantles of worry and frustration drop away completely.

When taking one of these outings, a person should just forget his problems and go. Upon his return, things will be seen in new perspective. Perhaps you can understand the frame of mind of Rudyard Kipling when he wrote 'The Feet of the Young Men'.

The chorus reads:

'He must go--- go--- go away from here!

On the other side the world he's overdue.

'Send your road is clear before you when the old

Spring-fret comes o'er you

And the Red Gods call for you!'

BOAT CRUISES

RIVER, ISLAND, COASTAL

Here again we have a type of outing that can be combined with a variety of activities. Some of the more obvious of these are fishing, photography, waterfowl hunting, exploring and sight-seeing.

Possibly the greatest thrill that comes from this type of vacation is the continual unfolding of a new panorama of scenery and objects of interest.

Some of the river trips traverse remote sections of country that were once the scene of gold rush activities. Sometimes a bend in the river brings to view an abandoned homestead or trapper's cabin, or maybe even a ghost town if one is lucky. Vacationers are able to try their skill with a gold pan on some of these runs.

Coastal and island cruises in the Kodiak Island region, Prince William Sound, and the Alexander Archipelago, display some of Alaska's most beautiful scenery and interesting sights, not to mention fishing beyond compare.

A little farther south in the archipelago is the British Columbia coastal region and island complex. Here, remote beaches, vertical cliffs, streaming waterfalls, and deep fjords give the visitor the sensation of a different world. Remote is the word for the Alaska-British Columbia coast!

These coastal trips should be confined to the summer time. This is, in general, a heavy rainfall area, and there is very little really good weather except in the summer. The rain forest of the northern coast is a study in itself. You have probably never seen anything like it.

Through all this beauty and pleasant activity runs the unique chain of experiences of eating and sleeping aboard a gently rolling craft or pitching a tent on the beach and building up a roaring fire to sit arou----------oh heck, wait till I get my hat. I'll go with you!

CROSS COUNTRY TRAIL RIDES

(ZONE B ONLY)

This particular safari vacation combines nicely with such activities as photography, exploring, and fishing. It is also remarkably well adapted to just lazing along, relaxing, and thoroughly enjoying one's self.

Good companionship, nice summer weather, good food, and a leisurely pace all go to make a never-to-be-forgotten experience.

This type of outing is only available in Zone B (British Columbia-Alberta). The southern interior of this zone is mostly dry and warm in comparison to the coastal regions and the far north. The ground is firm and supports horses well. Underbrush is generally thin and there are many trails. The region is generously dotted with good trout lakes.

All this sets the stage for some very interesting and satisfying trips. Rides of almost any duration up to four weeks can be taken. Visits to excellent fishing lakes and streams are scheduled.

Consider the impact of a four week pack trip without even getting in hearing distance of a road! If preferred, short trail outings of three days, one week, or whatever is desired can be provided, with the balance of the time spent at a guest ranch or lodge.

Sight-seeing tours of such famous resort areas as Banff, Lake Louise, Jasper Park, or Radium Hot Springs are often arranged as sidelights of the trip.

All things considered, this type safari is a very delightful summer vacation. There is no scenery in the world that can outclass the Canadian Rockies. It just isn't possible.

LIGHT AIRCRAFT TOURS

(ZONE A ONLY)

In much of Alaska, light aircraft are the only answer to the transportation problem. Small and large bodies of water are everywhere. A float plane in the hands of a good pilot can put you in some of the most inaccessible places in existence.

This situation creates fabulous possibilities for fishing, exploring, sight-seeing, photography, or waterfowl hunting. The method is also used quite extensively throughout Alaska for big game hunts.

With literally thousands of places available within cruising range of light aircraft, it is no wonder that there is unexcelled fishing to be had. Many of the operators set up tent camps on some of these lake sites. Others build cabins or even small lodges to accommodate guests.

One thing is readily evident. When a good pilot who knows the country takes you a hundred miles into the bush and puts you down on a small lake for a bit of fishing or sight-seeing, it is not likely that you will be bothered by people – at least not in this century. And yet you are only an hour from civilization. This is part of the saga of Alaska. Roads are difficult and expensive to build. Populations are thin and scattered. Aircraft are the connecting link. They will be for a long time to come.

Normally, the light aircraft tour is conducted in conjunction with some form of permanent base – lodge, cabins, or tent camp. Clients are piloted out from this base in the direction and to the distance indicated by the activity selected. Needless to say, a great deal of scenery can be digested by this method in a very short time. With a pilot-guide to explain the various outstanding sights and landmarks, a good understanding of the area geography is possible.

As a parting thought, we might say that an outfitter with whom we work tells us that he can put a fisherman down in places that he will guarantee haven't been fished more than a couple of times in the past thousand years. We don't know how he plans to prove this, but we certainly don't have any reason to doubt the accuracy of his statement.

HOW TO USE THE TARIFF

It will be noted that the manual is constructed largely around its two tariff sections.

SECTION ONE - BIG GAME HUNTING

SECTION TWO - OUTDOOR VACATIONS

In between these two sections are suggestions on personal equipment and clothing. Altogether there are twelve types of safaris represented. As the reader examines each type he will note that the left-hand page is the tariff sheet and the right-hand page is a commentary about the particular kind of outing involved. We believe you will find these interesting and convenient to use. To a great extent the tariff is self-explanatory.

In the upper right-hand corner of each tariff sheet are found the months of the year that particular activity is available.

Below this is the first paragraph with the heading --"SERVICES FURNISHED INCLUDE"-- Read this carefully. It states exactly what the client gets for his money.

The next paragraph is headed --"SERVICES DO NOT INCLUDE"--. Read this carefully also. We might suggest, in regard to the shipment of meat, that we have no objection to the client making arrangements of his own on this matter. However, we believe it to be impractical in most cases unless the meat is valued as a novelty or trophy.

Regarding the third paragraph -- "CLIENT FURNISHES" --: In some instances our specific instructions to the client stipulate that one or more of these items be left home. They may not be needed or the outfitter may be furnishing them.

Following this paragraph is the price chart. It will be noted that these trips are available in five different time periods -- two weeks, three weeks, four weeks, six weeks, and two months. These are total times, including air transportation. Actual time on safari from outfitting point is usually two to four days less.

Notice that there are two areas of origin:

(1) North America, and
(2) the free World Outside North America

There are also two destination zones: (see map on back cover)

(A) Alaska-Yukon, and
(B) British Columbia - Alberta

Some of the safaris are available in only one of these zones. When filling out an order-for-services, please list the code number and length of time desired as shown on the applicable tariff sheet.

As a theoretical example let us select a client who wishes to depart from New York and take the two-week hunting safari for a mixed-bag in Zone A (Alaska-Yukon). He will turn to the tariff for the mixed-bag hunt - page 10. On the second price grid he will find the heading, "From any North American point to Zone A (Alaska-Yukon)". Here he will be able to select the length of time he wishes from the five time columns. This having been done, the price is clearly indicated. The code number for ordering is in black on the price line to the extreme left. In this particular example, the price will be found to be $3067.00. The order number is 102-1A.

If first class air fare is desired, we bill separately for it as soon as the exact amount has been determined.

HOW TO ORDER

The client simply fills out an Order-for-Services form (page 45) and mails it to Alcan Safaris, P. O. Box 481, Lewiston, Idaho, U. S. A. along with a one-third deposit. By consulting the price schedules in the tariff section, he can readily determine the cost of the outing and calculate the deposit required. When the order and deposit arrive in our offices, we send the client a letter of acknowledgment and proceed with making the necessary arrangements and depositing earnest payments to hold the reservations.

Affirmation is then made to the client. This consists of furnishing him with a confirmation-of-reservations, preliminary instructions and suggestions, and a request to remit the balance of the charges. This two-thirds balance must be in our offices not later than forty-five days prior to take-off date. On orders that are placed less than forty-five days in advance, the entire amount must be remitted with the order-for-services.

Not later than fifteen days prior to take-off date we furnish the client with the following: a completed itinerary, licenses, airline tickets, negotiable script (travelers cheques for cash purchases), final instructions, and a performance certificate. The performance certificate is a very important document which the client gives to the outfitter upon initial contact. It serves as proof to the outfitter that the person presenting it is the client who has paid for the reservation. It also serves as the outfitter's proof to Alcan Safaris that services were performed. When the outing is over, the client signs the certificate for the outfitter, who in turn signs it and sends it to our offices for final payment.

In the event of a client cancellation the final two-thirds payment is refunded. If another client can be placed in the vacated booking, the initial one-third is also refunded, less any expenses accrued in the cancelling client's behalf. If a replacement client cannot be obtained, the initial one-third deposit is forfeited. Obviously, if a cancellation becomes unavoidable, the earlier it is made the better the chances of obtaining a replacement.

ADVANCE BOOKING REQUIREMENTS

Orders should be placed as far in advance as possible. A year or more is ideal. There is no absolute minimum and we endeavor to make placements on notice as short as six weeks. However, in general, the farther in advance we get the orders, the more satisfactory are the arrangements.

The seasons set by the game departments for the fall big game hunts are often not announced until late summer. Therefore, on hunting bookings that involve the very first or last of a particular season, the exact scheduling is deferred until these dates are made public by the departments. This should be borne in mind and some allowance made on the time needed to be gone from one's work.

HUNTING SUCCESS PROBABILITY

The hunter's chances for success in the Alcan region are extremely good. They are further enhanced if he is in good physical condition, a better-than-average rifleman, and eager to hunt. Our associate outfitters can normally locate good representative trophy animals of the species sought. A record-book specimen, of course, is a more difficult matter. If the client is desirous of getting an animal that will be eligible for a place in the record books he is assisted in every way to obtain one. However, hunting fortunes are unpredictable, and it should be understood that the unyielding pursuit of a record head can result in passing up good trophies and ultimately being disappointed. If superior specimens are a must, it would be well to consider one of our longer safaris.

If the client chooses to return home before his time has been used up, he does so of his own volition and the price is not affected.
